Buddy Uldrikson's philosophy is grounded in the methodologies of that "Inner Circle" of horsemen like Ray Hunt and Tom Dorrance. He has a natural ability to connect with a horse on a level most people spend most of their lives trying to learn, and don't even come close to. He advises his students, "You're not communicating from your head to your horse, you're communicating from your heart to his heart. That's where the connection is. On a regular basis, you will hear "discipline without violence", "watch for the TRY, and then acknowledge it," and "it's got to be a win-win situation for the horse and the rider."

At 15 years old, Buddy began learning to break horses the old cowboy way. He found that "better way" when Ray Hunt's "Colt Starting" video came into his life. He started applying it to each horse he worked with. Following this gentler way of dealing with horses, Buddy proceeded to hone his skills, finding he could relate easily to the style and the emotion involved. His search for knowledge led him to what many called "The Inner Circle" – Ray Hunt, Tom and Bill Dorrance, Buck Brannaman, Mike Thomas, and Bryan Nuebert – experienced trainers who believed in and developed this new approach of working with a horse instead of dominating it.

Don't miss this two-day event that will get you to the next level in your horse-manship. Buddy will be teaching groundwork, timing, problem solving, performing transitions, confidence, suppleness/balance and communication. Limited spots available call or e-mail today to get your spot reserved!
